Another Successful Family Re-united

A young Cooper's Hawk ventured down from its nest off Countryside Circle on 6/20 and was found wandering around the neighborhood. He gobbled up quail bits on his own right away. Another hawk came down its tree on the 26th in the same neighborhood and turned out to be from directly across from where the first one came from! At first, we thought maybe it was a Red-Shouldered Hawk as it was over twice the size of the first baby. After comparison and scoping out nest sites, it was determined this was no Red-Shouldered Hawk, but another Cooper's Hawk—just a female! Brother and sister were fed for another day and plans were made to put this crazy duo back with their rightful parents.

When three wonderful volunteers went out to reunite the two siblings, a third one was spotted in the tree. While the female co-operated nicely with our team, the male decided to come back out of the tree, scuttle around, and had to be returned a second time before staying put with his family.
